"Bearings are frequently blamed for various problems such as noise, vibration, over-heating and premature bearing failure, but", says Warren Walker, SKF Engineering Manager, "in many cases it is the housing that is the root cause of the problem. The role of the housing is often down-played yet it has numerous quintessential functions. The housing is responsible for transmitting the load from the shaft via the stationary bearing outer ring to the support foundation. An important secondary function is to protect the bearing against contamination and water ingress", explains Walker.

"After tightening of the housing base bolts during mounting, the bore diameter of inferior design housings can distort significantly thereby deforming the bearing outer ring. This often leads to uneven load distribution within the bearings, increased stress and internal friction and, in severe cases, complete lubricant breakdown. The worst case scenario would be premature bearing seizure and extensive damage to associated components", warns Walker. "The use of superior quality housings with the increased stiffness offered by the addition of support in critical areas, will lead to significantly improved bearing performance and the highest possible service life."

SKF's SNL housings are manufactured to world-class quality standards at the company's own foundry and machine shop, in Katrineholm, Sweden.

The extensive global customer survey done prior to the start of the re-design project for SNL housings, made it clear that the most important end user needs were longer service life, ease of mounting, reduced maintenance requirements and longer relubrication intervals. SKF's SNL housings meet these customer requirements to even the smallest detail. Features and benefits of the SNL housing include:

- A wide range of sizes and accessories are available
- Optimised housing bore tolerance and improved bore roundness
- Improved heat transfer for longer lubricant life
- Unique markings and features for simpler handling and faster mounting / dismantling

Do you use SKF SNL housings with your Spherical roller bearings?
